DIFFERENT KINDS OF VISION— Part 1...No Vision

People with no vision say this, “I’m content—like I have always been.”

People with no vision will always use “The 10 Commandments of Organizational Paralysis or...How to Put Mavericks in Their Place”:

1. That’s impossible
2. We don’t do things that way around here. It’s too much of a change.
3. We tried something like that once before—and it didn’t work.
4. I wish it were that easy!
5. It’s against policy to do it that way.

6. After you’ve been around here a little longer, you’ll understand.
7. Who gave you permission to change the rules?
8. Let’s get real, OK?
9. How dare you suggest that what we are doing is—wrong!
10. If you had been working here as long as I have, you’d understand that what you are suggesting is absolutely absurd—because it doesn’t fit into the current system!

People with no vision tend to worship at the idol of mediocrity and soon burn out.

I hope this is not you, although most of us have probably made a statement or two like that.

Next week will be: BLURRED VISION.

What are your thoughts about vision? TE
